Exemplary Volunteer Recognition Award Overview

Organizations benefit from a robust volunteer infrastructure that sustains their activities. Essential to this sustainability are volunteers, community members who recognize community needs and perform the activities needed to realize the goals of their organization's projects.

The Exemplary Volunteer Award seeks to recognize individuals who are outstanding volunteers in their organizations. To assist organizations in identifying high performing volunteers within their membership, UCC-APC considers the following qualities strong indicators of individuals who would be eligible for an Exemplary Volunteer Award.

- A commitment to the project at hand.
- Working for the greater good.
- Organizational skills and the ability to document facts, tasks and data.
- Results driven.
- Passionate and professional.
- An ability to share credit with other volunteers.
- A willingness to learn, absorb new ideas and tackle new skills.
- Respect for others and the ability to work in a team.
- A willingness to listen to another's point of view, and sometimes give up your own ideas to make someone else's ideas work.
- The ability to live up to promises or commitments in a timely manner. Or failing that, the ability to find a solution when this is not possible.
- Transparency. A good volunteer does not have a personal or hidden agenda.
- A cheerful disposition and positive outlook.
- A motivator.
